Place breads from various ethnic or cultural groups at the center of your group; for example, rice cakes, challah, corn bread, tortillas. Pray together.

LEADER: You shepherd us, Creator God. We lack nothing.

ALL: You bring us to green pastures and lead us to restful waters where you restore our spirits.

LEADER: You set a table before us in the sight of our foes. Our cups overflow.

ALL: Surely your goodness and kindness will follow us all the days of our lives. Amen.

Who would turn down an invitation to a royal wedding? Who among us didn't attend the marriage of Prince William and Kate Middleton, streaming live on a laptop? Or, who hasn't delighted in the photos of the royal babies and flipped through People in the grocery line to see their photos or followed Harry and Megan into and out of royal life? A royal wedding like the one in Sunday's gospel is a very big deal.

For all of us weddings evoke the deepest meaning of human life, the intimate communion between spouses, their commitment to make their love last and make room in their lives for family and friends. Weddings gather families and friends from near and far.

Our next door neighbor, Joe, felt as if he were seeing his whole lifetime in one snapshot at his son's wedding. Friends from his wife Margaret's doctoral work in neonatal care flew 19 hours from Australia to attend. The gynecologist that delivered the groom came from Vermont.

Neighbors who watched their kids grow up together with Joe's came from Pittsburgh. Another sister and I came from Minneapolis; we're neighbors who gardened and gabbed with Joe and Margaret many a summer evening. Two brothers and a sister came from Joe's family, and all six siblings from Margaret's, one flying back to the States from his work site in Peru.

Joe and Margaret walked their son through the gathered crowd to await his bride, who entered on the arms of her parents. Hearing a new couple vow their love and commit to sharing their lives takes old married folks back to the day of their commitment, now with full awareness of all that can ask.

Celebrating a new life commitment brings to consciousness the network of bonds that hold us together as families and friends. A wedding and a feast celebrate the union we hope for the whole human family.

GOSPEL

Come to the wedding feast.

NARRATOR: Jesus again addressed the chief priests and elders who challenged his authority.

JESUS: The kingdom of heaven may be compared to a king who gave a wedding banquet for his son. He sent his servants to summon the invited guests to the wedding, but they refused to come. He sent servants a second time.

KING: Tell those who have been invited, “See, I have my dinner prepared! I have killed my bullocks and corn-fed cattle; everything is ready. Come to the wedding banquet.”

JESUS: The invited guests ignored the king’s invitation and went their way—one to his farm and another to his business. The rest laid hold of the king’s servants, insulted them, and killed them. At this the king grew furious and sent his army to destroy those murderers and burn their city. Then he said to his servants:

KING: The banquet is ready, but those who were invited were not worthy to come. Go out onto the main streets and invite everyone you find to the wedding banquet.

JESUS: The servants went out into the streets and gathered all whom they found, both bad and good. This filled the wedding hall with banqueters.

Matthew 22.1-10

messiah means the anointed one or king.

The meal Jesus describes in Sunday’s parable is no ordinary dinner but the messiah’s wedding feast. The royal wedding setting is unique to Matthew’s telling of this parable.

Matthew adds other details to the parable that give the story double meanings. In this way he creates an allegory in which characters and actions in the parable stand for people and events at the time he wrote in the A.D. 80s.

The king is God.

The king’s son is Jesus, the bridegroom, Israel’s messiah, who has come to his people.

The first servants are the prophets of Israel. In Sunday’s first reading, the lectionary reads from one such prophet, Isaiah’s vision of a feast God will set for all nations in Jerusalem.

The first guests are Jews who do not recognize Jesus as the messiah. In Israel’s history, political leaders sought to kill the prophets Elijah and Jeremiah and did kill John the Baptist and Jesus.

The wedding feast celebrates a union that is not between just any man and woman but between the king’s son and the people of Israel.

The king’s troops are the Roman soldiers, who put down a Jewish rebellion in A.D. 70. The 10th Legion destroyed and burned the temple in Jerusalem, ending temple worship. Matthew’s allegory interprets the temple’s destruction as punishment of those who rejected Jesus.

Who will attend the messianic banquet?

The wedding feast is the third of the three parables Jesus uses in Matthew’s narrative to call the chief priests and elders to judgment. Two Sundays ago, the parable of the two sons asks them whether they are sayers or doers of God’s commands. Last week, the parable of the tenants asks whether they are murderous or fruitful tenants of God’s vineyard. The parable of the wedding feast asks if they are coming to God’s everlasting party.

Matthew enhances this third parable with details that both express who Jesus is and interpret events in the Church’s early history. The parable of the wedding feast carries over the father/son relationship from the parable of the tenants. We Christians quickly and rightly identify the son in both parables with Jesus.

In Israel’s traditions, son is a code word for messiah. Israel understood its king as God’s son. In Psalm 2 God says of the king on the day of his enthronement in Sion, “You are my son; today I have begotten you.” The word

The second servants, the ones who find guests on the highways and byways, are the Christian missionaries who preached the good news of Jesus' resurrection to new life to people from many nations.

The second guests are those from the many nations around the Mediterranean Sea who believe in Jesus and come to the messianic banquet.

● What does Matthew's allegory tell us about the community for which he writes?

● What message do you get from this gospel for today?

● In what ways do you imagine the kingdom of heaven is like a wedding feast?

Without Matthew's allegory the wedding parable raises everyday questions. Why don't people accept invitations or come late or just do a cameo? The parable asks us to look at how we humans relate to one another and set our priorities—the farm, the business, family, friends. Refusing guests risks no future invitations. Snubbed hosts have insult to process, their anger and disappointment to vent and resolve, hopefully without starting a war. Our relationships test us.

What about the food as a practical matter? Who pays the caterer for a wedding called off at the last minute? What does the host do with the food? How about the uneaten pizzas if few kids come to a youth group? What does one do with leftovers?

The king's fury seems overkill until a reader realizes Matthew is overlaying the parable with details that connect it to the Roman destruction of Jerusalem and the temple. The parable speaks more to us today without the allegory.

● How do you handle people who refuse an invitation?

● What do you do with the leftovers?

For Matthew, the story of God's love for humankind does not end with the end of temple worship. For him, Jesus the messiah hosts the wedding banquet in the eucharists Christians gather in his name to share. He sees in the preaching of the early Christian missionaries a new wave of God's servants gathering guests from among the nations for God's banquet. God's love reaches beyond Israel's boundaries to the Gentiles.

For Christians, Jesus' meal, our eucharist, is the messianic banquet, a feast for all nations.

Jesus opens new possibilities for gathering people into union with God. He shows us that wholeness and salvation flower from loving enemies, sharing what one has, making peace, showing mercy.

All people will feast.

Isaiah 24-27 forms a special unit that commentators call the "Isaiah Apocalypse." Sunday's first reading comes from these visionary chapters, which were written to the people of Israel in exile in the 500s B.C.

Isaiah describes a feast which God will prepare for the people of Israel in Jerusalem. The exiles will celebrate this feast on the mountain where the temple stood before the Babylonians destroyed it.

This meal is more than a welcome home festival for Israelites. The prophet describes all nations sharing this table, its food and its fellowship. Isaiah envisions that this communion in God will lift the veil of sorrow from the nations and that God will wipe away every tear.

God's Feast

On this mountain the Holy One will provide a feast for all of rich food and choice wines, juicy foods and clear wines. On this mountain God will destroy the veil that veils all peoples, the web woven over all nations. God will swallow death forever, wipe the tears from all faces, and take away the disgrace of the people from all the earth.

On that day it will be said: This is our God, to whom we looked to save us, the Holy One for whom we have waited. Let us be glad and rejoice in God's salvation. For the hand of God will rest on this holy mountain.

Isaiah 25.6-10

The imagery of plenty and feasting reaches back into the earliest religious writing we find in the land that became home to the people of Israel. In the land of Canaan, as in California and the Southwest, rain greens the hills with grass during fall and winter months but sun and heat scorch them over the course of spring and summer.

The Canaanites celebrated the greening of the new year each fall. They celebrated the victory of Baal, who defeated Mot, the god whose name meant death and who each year turned the earth to dry dust. Baal rode the clouds, thundered and struck lightning bolts, and brought rains that made the fields fertile.

He went to our cupboards, took food off the shelves, and bagged it. I wanted to be like that. Quiet and good."

As Israel learned to worship one Creator God, they still recognized abundant food as God's blessing. Psalm 23, Sunday's responsorial psalm, pictures God as a shepherd who finds green pastures and plentiful water for the sheep and a chef who prepares a table in the sight of one's enemies.

Isaiah's ancient image of God as host of a table where all may eat calls us to the future work of setting a table for the hungry today. It envisions the ultimate communion of all humankind in God.

Faith Sharing Tip

How to use the questions

Sunday by Sunday offers more than enough questions, aiming to interest a variety of readers. Talk about the questions that most interest your faith-sharing group. You never have to use all the questions.

PRAY

Use the bread to offer blessings on the people they represent. For example, let the rice cakes occasion a blessing for the needs of Asian peoples you know.

LEADER: Creator God, we seek to be doers, not sayers of your word.

ALL: We seek to provide your owner's share of the harvest; that is, justice for those without means.

LEADER: We welcome your invitation to feast and fellowship with all humankind.

Offer blessings for peoples for whom you wish to pray.

LEADER: Let us bless one another with peace.
